Dear Denver Citizens:

Many years ago, before I became the Mayor of Denver, I was aware of the important contribution that The City Club of Denver makes to the life of our city.

As a young politician, I knew that an invitation to speak to the members of the City Club meant that I'd have the opportunity to present myself to some of the most informed, attentive and caring citizens of Denver.

I remember thinking that if I could make them think I was smart, I'd have it made!

The City Club, founded in 1922 by the civic leaders of that time, continues to provide significant programs at their weekly luncheons at the Brown Palace Hotel every Tuesday from September to May.

One of my fondest memories of the City Club was in 2002 when the club celebrated its 80th birthday by inviting all the then-living mayors to attend their party. Sharing the podium with my immediate predecessor, Federico Pena, and Tom Currigan and Quigg Newton was one of the highlights of my experience as the Mayor of Denver.

I would encourage any citizen of the metro area who cares about public policy and the cultural life of our city to consider becoming a member of The City Club of Denver.

Furthermore, I hope that many of our companies and businesses get involved in supporting the club's activities.

Yours truly,

Wellington E. Webb
Mayor of Denver
